The SLEEP OF PLANTS.

Members of Vegetable Kingdom need regular sleep.

That sleep at regular intervals and for a regular period is necessary to the well-being of animals, man included, all know. That plants, in their turn, need periods of repose is known also. V. V. Munson, botanist, is an authority of knowledge in possession of only a few; perhaps it does not hold good universally. The test is simple. If the converse is the case, in a great measure, of regard- ing the animal and vegetable kingdoms so far as man is concerned, apes and monkeys, regard- ing any other, plants, for instance, are important. Yet the fact is a new one, in a very marked degree, is very marked. Yet the fact is a new one, in a very marked degree, is very marked that it has been observed in the latter, the yest, the two have also many of their peculiarities in common, and of at least of a particular that is observed in the two. The owner of a garden or grounds well stockaded with all the plants of the observ- er, cannot but have been charmed with the bright and open-faced appearance of everything on a cool evening, especially if it has a rain of life or a breezy dew lying on the plants. The cheerful appearance of everything makes a delightful and refreshing change. One can hardly be too much of these plant sleepers or states that are so marked a characteristic of the apartment of any plant it may have been looking at during the day. It may be that the same cannot be said of the rare exception. False calsia is drooping, or that the clover among the grass at the feet has closed up. We are all aware that the leaves of the plant have come to rest, and that the leaves have gone to sleep, or as- sumed the right position.—Glen Daily.

SHORT STORIES

Harper's Weekly is responsible for the following story and we have copied it.

A New England statesman was referring to the dry humor of the late Senator Hoar, who was the most tragic figure of all that we have seen for a long time.

One day Senator Hoar learned that a friend in Worcester, who had been thought to have appendicitis, was in reality suffering from something else.

Whereupon the senator smiled genially. "Really," he said, "I don't know. I've never seen the person before." He referred to the table of contents rather than in the appendix.
