Dear friend:-

I have recently had a report concerning most of the graduates and ex-students of this school and among these I have your report. It is a great encouragement to me in the work I am trying to do here to know that so many of the old students are doing so well. I know that many of them must have great difficulty in living honest, upright lives when their surroundings are not altogether up-lifting. I know that oftentimes their failures come not so much because they wilfully do wrong but because they are drawn into wrong-doing on account of their inexperience with life.

At such times, I trust you will remember what Carlisle tried to teach you when you were a student here several years ago: to be brave and not give up even if you fail a few times. Each time you rise, you grow that much stronger to resist the next temptation.

I trust I may hear from you sometime.

Very truly yours
