CHRISTMAS

INDIAN TRAINING SCHOOL, CARRIAGE, PA., JANUARY 5, 1883.

(To a friend: "You are doubtless aware that the system of withdrawing Indians from their tribes, and of educating them apart, is not new; that it was tried two hundred years ago by the Catholische of Spain and France, and the Protetants of England, and that, in spite of the greatest outcry of money, zeal and precious lives, it proved a failure.

We answer: Neither of these nations managed as having withdrawn Indians from their tribes to educate them had any true idea of the Indian character, and while we do not know the special methods which they followed in the instruction of their wild pupils, we do know that the spirit that could sustain a Philip in the Encrual, or plan a St. Bartholomew’s Eve, could not well be so unlike itself as to have the gentleness, and patience, and forgiveness, that would break down the barriers that hedged in the savage mind and let in that True Light which alone can purify, and refine, and elevate, and even our dear Protestant England was so sagacious she drove out her own children who suffered from her, exposing them to the tender mercies of the savages whom she proposed to Christianize.

At that time, too, there had been no desire awakened in the minds of the Indian for a new mode of life. It was not so much in the sense of the advancement of a simple people that they do not rise at once from the depths of darkness into the bright light of wisdom and knowledge. It was so with us; it has been so with other nations.

The uprise of the Indian has been so slow that many have concluded he could not be induced freely to come out of his savage life. Learning, they say, is but a long work, and that to-day from nearly all the tribes comes a call for the means of gaining knowledge. Those who have no schools, ask for them; those who are par- tially educated, ask for higher privileges, thus proving to us that the time for their deliverance from the bondage of ignorance is come. We at Carlisle believe we have proof that the desire of the Indian, from every tribe, could soon be gathered into schools were only the conditions existing which would permit their being invited to enter them, and that the failure to educate all classes at least a partial failure in our effort to educate a few, as those who are left will form a nucleus for another generation of savage life.

Perhaps a stronger argument than any other for our hope of success now, when efforts akin to ours have been a failure in the past, is that the Indian sees himself that he must be educated in all that pertains to civilized life, in his only salvation from extermination. He is shut in on every side by the white population, and can no longer roam to hunt and to war, and that he sees his destiny we have proof in the fact that, from nearly all the twenty-nine tribes which are now repre- sented here, come requests for the admission of many of their children into this school, and that nearly all the letters received by our pupils from their friends are full of urgent appeals to them to improve all the opportuni- ties given them to gain a knowledge of books and of labor.

Dr. Beecher was speaking of a recent trip spent forty years ago along the Sioux, is most full in accord with these sentiments, and throw all his influ- ence with ours in urging that our Government make immediate arrange- ments for the education of all the youths in all the tribes.

The Unita Reservation.

WASHINGTON, December 14.—Senator Bayard yesterday introduced a bill concerning the Unita Indian reservation, which is not only of local importance to Oregon, but of interest to all other Pacific Coast States and Territories in which immense tracts of valuable land are withheld from settlement for the occupation of a ridiculously disproportionate number of peaceable Indians. This carefully prepared measure deals with a reservation of 465,000 acres of arable and timber lands, now reserved for the benefit of less than 750 Indians—men, women and children. Senator Bayard believes that the welfare and the interests of the State alike will be largely promoted by reducing this immense reservation and settling the Indians on lands in security. He is confident that the majority of Congress take the same view, and in the event of the passage of his bill, it will doubtless be followed by similar action in regard to many similar cases.—Exchange.

And should Congress take such action will they not secure the highest interests of these Indians and the State by demanding that each child of all these tribes be educated, not only in letters, but that they be taught all forms of labor which will be beneficial to them in their new life, in order that they may have something to call their own—something to choose to do for themselves?—Indianapolis Journal.

Dr. Leonard Bacon, recently deceased, was born among the Ojibwa Indians, his father being a missionary to that people.

Christmas.

Christmas was very enjoyable at the Barracks, especially to the pupils. With roast turkey, chicken and mince pies for dinner, and ginger-bread cookies as an extra treat before going to the Christmas distribution of presents, their lower natures seemed to be fully satisfied.

The chapel was decorated with evergreen, and a tree illuminated with tapers, under which lay gifts for every scholar. The gifts were sent from various localities by friends of the school, and while we hope the donors might have had the added pleasure of being present to see the sparkling eyes and joy-lighted faces of those who received the gifts. As the scholars had been participants in so many gifts from friends at a distance, it was thought it would have a heart-warming moral influence on them to do something to show their gratitude for such favors, and the teachers were asked to oversee the preparation of such articles as they might be able to make to send as Christmas gifts to different people.

The display of the results of their hard work, as it was collected in a room preparatory to packing, was very pleasing, and really astonishing, even to us who knew something of their ability in that direction. The girls had prepared small beggars, moosekins, baby cradles, knife sheaths, etc.

The boys in the tailor shop produced, a tiny uniform suit, and from the shoe shop came a boot that a Littlepukum Prince might be proud to wear. From the hat shop were sent caps that, in neatness of work- ship, it would be hard to excel.

The skill of our artists had also been put into requisition, and those who received the fans and wooden plates with their variety of designs and coloring will, we are sure, prize them for their beauty as well as for the preparatory work which went into them.

The Indian boy amuses himself in his own home by molding figures from clay. A finer quality than he finds on the prairies was obtained for our small boys, and there were whole herds of buffalo, horses, deer and elk from which to select specimens to send to their friends. Many of these figures showed a natural talent for the art, and that the young artists had been keen observers of the animals they had imitated; but there was one madly by a little Pocahontas boy that far excelled all the others in skill and splendor of the animals. He had made three different foxes, and perfectly duplicated, as though mufinig the scent of a lurking foe.

We think that a little Indian boy fresh from the prairies who can throw so much of life into a bit of clay, proves himself an embryo artist of a high order, and that some one who wields mallet and chisel may well covet to give him a place in his studio.

The special correspondent of the Philadelphia Times, with a company of his friends, was a Christmas feast spread by a nephew of Chief Joseph, a Nek Pocahontas. After speaking to his own people he turned to his guests and said: "It is with glad hearts we welcome you to the warmest place in our wigwam. The feast we have made for you is in celebration of no heathenistic rite—no relics of barbarism; but an act of Christianity and love. We feel glad that this day—when Christ, our common Savior, was born, that we representatives of a people who have often and long been at war meet here to drink of the same cup and eat of the same dish. We hope you will tell all those who do not believe that the Indian can be civilized and have no faith in the future, how you have been visited to-day by your Indian friends."

INDIAN TRAINING SCHOOL, CARRIAGE, PA., JUNE 6, 1883.

My Dear Mother and Father:

I am very glad to tell you something about song, please again let Mattie and me we going to sing in the chapel next time the choir sings nice, that time I sing not nice, because I real, that is the reason I did not sing nicely, so next time I will sing nicely, Mattie Reid, too. Dear Haydey, if you please, we going to sing again, I am so sorry I did not write long letter for you because it is time to be school out now, so I am going to speak little. Dear Mather I will try to be a good girl this time I am to be wiser girl every day. I want to read you something, but I cannot in the place of this paper, so call home to the Father’s House, and sent messengers to the friends at home telling them to give God their hearts and pray to Him always.
