INDIANS WOULD FORGET

Want Their Young Braves To Drop Aboriginal Tongue.

[Carlisle (Pa.) Dispatch in Philadelphia Record.]

The first Indian pow-wow for years at the Indian school here was conducted during the past few days, when four dusky giant Cheyenne chiefs from the Tongue River reservation, in Montana, visited the children of the tribe at the Government's educational institution, and later showed the marks of civilizing influence when they quietly slipped into a drug store and silently sipped chocolate milkshakes.

At the pow-wow the four chiefs, together with the 30 Cheyenne students at the school, considered the advantages the white men are giving them. Through an interpreter they talked to Superintendent Friedman and declared themselves more than ever converted to education, and that they would go back to their people and talk and send them to school. These same old fellows have been strong opponents in the past of the white man's education. More amazing than anything else, the four chiefs agreed that it would be best that their children should speak no Indian language; that they should forget the past and seek citizenship in the future.

The Cheyenne chiefs who stopped off on their return to Montana from Washington, were Charles Nonyak, Charles Toe Ball, William Bighead and Little Son. Accompanying them was an interpreter and Red Water, a former Indian school student and member of the football eleven of 1898, but who is now a prosperous farmer. Chief Little Son was one of Gen. Nelson A. Miles' scouts during the Indian uprising at the time of the Custer massacre.

Dear Friend:

I have your letter also the blank, and am pleased to hear from you. I have had some very encouraging letters from graduates and returned students, and am pleased with the progress they seem to be making. I am glad to know that you have a position now which you think will be prominent, and I trust you will do your utmost to fill the position with credit. I am today mailing you a copy of the Red Man and our Annual Report. As soon as our new catalog is out, I shall be glad to send you a copy of it.

Very truly yours,

NRD-MID.

Superintendent.
