CARLISLE RETURNED STUDENT A
PRODUCER AND LEADER.

The following letter has been received from Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs Abbott, showing the splendid record being made by Fred Lookout, an Indian who was educated at Carlisle, who is now the chief of the Osage tribe. It should prove of interest to the many readers of THE ARROW, and an inspiration to Indians everywhere:

Washington, May 7, 1913.

DEAR MR. FRIEDMAN:—I know you will be interested in receiving the following excerpt from Supervisor Freer's report on conditions at Osage superintendency, as it relates to an ex-student of the Carlisle School:

"Fred Lookout, age 54, ex-Carlisle student, cultivates 90 acres of corn by hired labor. He feeds most of the corn to cattle and hogs and cultivates a large garden himself. Has 27 head of cows, 70 hogs, a good lot of chickens and turkeys, 5 brood mares, and several work horses and mules. He raises plenty of hay. They butchered 16 head of hogs the past winter for their own use. His wife, also a former Carlisle student, is an excellent housekeeper and mother, and puts up fruit of which I saw several fine specimens. The man is the present chief of the tribe and universally respected."

Sincerely, F. H. ABBOTT.
