Lucy Whitebear:-

I have a special report from Miss Johnston about you and am sorry to know that you have made such a miserable failure of your outing. "Impertinent," "disobedient," "indifferent," "saucy" are some of the adjectives used to describe your conduct since you have been out. You have even been dishonest and taken some things which did not belong to you. Why do you behave in this way, Lucy? You are old enough to know better. If you were a child, we would know how to punish you for such mis-conduct but you are nearly a young lady and no one wants to discipline you as they would a child. This report that Miss Johnston has sent in about you, must be placed with your school records and will always have to stand against you.

You have nearly a month more to remain with Mrs. Buck and I want you to try your very best so as not to leave such a bad impression with her. She is willing to overlook your past mistakes and will help you to be a better girl but you must take a big brace yourself. I want your next report to be better than the one I have now.

Very truly yours

NRD

Chief Clerk in Charge.

Any general statement or wishes of patron or pupils, together with Agent's estimate of place, people, and pupil:

Lucy has been very trying to Mrs. Buck. She has been very saucy and has repeatedly disobeyed. She has been indifferent as to whether she did her work well or even at all. Sometimes she has paid no attention to Mrs. Buck when spoken to or called. She has acted very sulky at times.

For all these failures Lucy blames no one but herself and says she does not know what makes her act so.

The home is a happy one for a girl. There are many privileges which she can enjoy. Mrs. Buck takes a keen interest in showing and helping any girl who will help herself even a little.

Because of Lucy's eyes and her general appearance I have been glad that Mrs. Buck was willing to keep her and help her. During the first part of her stay in the home she took some articles which did not belong to her. This failure has been overcome. Lucy promised to make an improvement all around.

L. M. Johnston.
