THE AMERICAN INDIAN AND COLLEGE ATHLETICS.

It is an undeniable fact that interest in physical culture and sport is increasing in our educational institutions. Nevertheless, there are many who believe that in the colleges and universities this tendency is developing athletes rather than fitting students for higher and better things.

Some are so radical as to declare that college athletes are apt to be failures in practical life. On the other hand, others declare that nothing so fits a man for the battle of life, for success in any field of labor, as a thorough training in athletics.

There may be two sides to this question of college athletics for the young American white man, but the testimony seems all one way as to the American Indian, according to facts collected by Mr. Friedman and published in the College World under the title "The Carlisle Indian Athlete as a Citizen." And it should be remembered that the Carlisle Indian athlete is a good deal of an athlete, holding his own with the best of the college world.

At Carlisle, a school maintained by the government for the purpose of uplifting the Indian race, particular attention has been given to athletic training. Mr. Friedman says:

Because so many of these athletes were well known during their terms at Carlisle and received enough attention in the public press to turn many a white boy's head, and in view of the recent interest in the whole subject of athletics, I have carefully investigated the records of the most prominent athletes from the Carlisle school, and I invariably find them among our most successful ex-students and graduates.

Here are some instances cited:

The first football captain at Carlisle was Benjamin Caswell, a Chippewa from Minnesota, in 1892. Today he is superintendent of the government's Indian school at Cass Lake, Minn.; he owns real estate and property valued at $9,000 and has a bank account.

Frank Mt. Pleasant was one of the best athletes in this country, holding several records. From Carlisle he went to Dickinson College, and was the first Indian to obtain a diploma from it. Now he is athletic director at Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pa.

James Phillips, another Carlisle athlete and a full-blooded Cherokee, is a judge at Aberdeen, Wash.

Almost everybody in the United States knows that Charles Bender by his pitching was largely responsible for the winning of the world's baseball championship by the Philadelphia club last fall. Bender, a Chippewa, learned to play ball at Carlisle. He is married, has a beautiful home at Tioga, a suburb of Philadelphia, possesses other property there, and is a respected member of the community.

James Metoxen, famous as a full-back at Carlisle, went back to the Oneida reservation in Wisconsin and to-day is a prosperous farmer.

Bemus Pierce, captain of Carlisle's famous football team of 1896, owns a fine farm at Irving, N. Y., but manages to spend part of each year as football coach at one of the Eastern universities.

James Johnson, another Wisconsin Indian, was considered a wonderful athlete in his day. From Carlisle he went to the dental department of Northwestern university, was graduated in 1907, and is now earning $4,000 a year practicing his profession at San Juan, Porto Rico.

Edward Rogers, another all-around athlete of Carlisle, is a successful lawyer at Walker, Minn., and has been judge of the Probate court.

Those mentioned are only a few of the Indians who won fame as athletes at Carlisle and afterward achieved success in business life. The noteworthy fact is that the Indians who were best in athletics turned out the best citizens. Therefore it must be conceded that the maximum of college athletics was helpful and not harmful to the Indians, and the champions of college sports may "point with pride" to him when their hobby is attacked.—Editorial, Chicago, Ill., Inter Ocean., March 12, 1911.

THE CREATION OF MAN.

LOUIS DUPUIS, Sac & Fox.

Every race has its myths and legends. The Indians had no written language, yet through oral traditions they have preserved some interesting stories.

The following is an Indian legend which has been preserved for many generations concerning the Indian idea of creation. They believe in two Gods—Ketchi-manito or the good spirit, and Machi-manito, or the evil spirit.

Ketchi-manito, or the good ruler thought to himself that the world was incomplete without anything living in the water or on the dry land. So he created the beautiful fishes to live in the water and man to live on land.

Machi-manito saw that these two creations were good and this made him very angry and jealous. He went to work to imitate the good ruler. In trying to make a fish he made a snake. He felt ashamed because he could not make a fish, so he turned his attention toward making a man; but here he also failed; instead of a man, he made a monkey. This is the reason the Indians assign for the existence of snakes and monkeys.

AN EMPLOYER of experience, who knows the importance of strict obedience to orders, recently said of a boy in his employ: "That lad will never get along because he hates to obey. I never give him an order without feeling his resistance to it, though he may say nothing. He will never find work that suits him, or that he is happy in, because every good worker has to obey, willingly and cheerfully, either his employer or the laws of his work, or the terms of his contract; but he cannot get away from obedience. Bob, of course, thinks differently. But Bob is only fourteen, and his employer has had fifty years experience. Which is the more likely to be right?—Industrial School Echo.

Indians Good Firemen.

Some of the north-east end residents and shopmen thought there was a fire at the Indian School Friday afternoon. There wasn't. It was a fire drill. The boys handled their hand engine "Uncle Sam" in great style and ran with it from the engine house to the recitation building, a good distance, and had water in three and one-half minutes. Ladders were up as fast as any Empire boys ever put 'em up, and taken as a whole, the Indian fire fighters proved themselves very alert.

By the way—are fire drills still on the program in our public school buildings?—Carlisle Sentinel.

ABOUT CARLISLE ATHLETICS.

THE ANNUAL CLASS MEET.

Monday was a very beautiful day, and the annual class championship meet was enjoyed by a full turnout by the school and a number from town. Though not as closely contested as that of last year, the meet was not devoid of its interesting features, owing to the rivalry of the classes and the new material developing in the different events.

The winning of the meet lay between the seniors and rooms numbers nine and ten; but before the events had been well started it was evident that Schenandore's great point-winning ability would tell in favor of room ten, which finally won the meet with fifteen points to the good, getting 46 to room nine's 31. The seniors won third.

No school records were broken, but probably the most exciting event was the 120-yard hurdle which was run in 16 flat and with Schenandore and Wheelock breasting the tape together. The class spirit was greatly in evidence, and the new songs and yells were of great variety and down-to-dateness.

The Johns Hopkins lacrosse team of Baltimore defeated the Carlisle Indians last Saturday, 8 to 5. In spite of the condition of the field, which was covered with mud and water, and notwithstanding the rain which fell during the entire game, the contest was a remarkably fast one and good form was shown by both teams. The Hopkins team was the strongest we have met on the field this season. Carlisle has nothing to be ashamed of, as this is only their second season playing lacrosse, while Hopkins has played the game for twenty-five years. With some changes on our team our boys hope to beat Harvard Saturday.

The lacrosse team left for Cambridge this morning, where they will meet Harvard in the Stadium tomorrow. As the defeat by Johns Hopkins last Saturday showed the team's weaknesses which have been corrected this week, Carlisle stands an even chance of winning this most important game.

The relay team, which will go to Philadelphia tomorrow, is composed of the following men: Louis Dupuis, Moses Friday, Gus Welch and Mike Martin. Fred Schenandore will go along as substitute and will enter the special 120-yard hurdle race.

Ora Halftown was the dark horse of the class meet, winning second place in the pole vault and scoring a point in the high jump. With faithful training for these events he should develop into a point winner in our dual meets.

The dual meet next week Saturday with Dickinson promises to be a very close one. Dickinson has an unusually good team this year while Carlisle seems to be somewhat weaker than usual.

The class meet showed that the track boys will have to work hard to win the dual meets and make a good showing at Harrisburg for the State Championship, which we have won for the past three years.

Henry Priest was another new man who showed up well at the class meet, winning the half-mile in rather easy fashion.

Pat Miller was right there in the one mile run, and is developing into a fine distance runner.

Training table was started for the track and lacrosse teams Tuesday.

Indians in the World in Boston.

Four representatives of Carlisle, James Mumblehead, Clement Hill, John Goslin and Abram Colonhaski, are now in Boston attending the World's Missionary Congress that is being held there. They are assisting in making this an important missionary meeting, and will aid by some songs and exhibitions. Nora McFarland, a Nez Perce student, will render several hymns in the sign language.

Thoughts From Great Minds.

"Labor is the great schoolmaster of the race."
"Twenty things half done do not make one thing well done."
"No great achievement was ever accomplished without great labor."
"Our greatest glory is not in never falling, but in rising every time we fall."

GOOD MANNERS.

MINNIE WHITE, Mohawk.

"Good manners often succeed where the best tongue has failed."

GOOD manners can be acquired by everybody. In order that he may have good manners, a person does not need to be rich or famous, for politeness is the birthright of both the rich and the poor, the humble and the exalted. Politeness is the mainspring of all civilized existence; without politeness on somebody's part, our much boasted civilization would not exist for a day. Therefore, we must all set ourselves diligently to the task of acquiring good manners that we may take our place in the world. Politeness is the key that opens all doors leading to success in life; a rude, ill-mannered person never reaches any desirable height. First of all, a person with good manners wins friends; no matter where he goes, he will always succeed, for he will find that courtesy extended to him that he extends to others; he brings sunshine to hearts that are sad; he strengthens those who are discouraged; his influence is on the side of right, for the "man who is thoroughly polite is two-thirds a Christian." If two young men just starting out in life should apply for the same position; if one had the inestimable charm of good manners and the other had taken no time to cultivate the grace of politeness, the former fellow would, without doubt, obtain the desired position; politeness is in demand everywhere. It makes no difference what place in the community you hold, there are the same rules for you to follow in relation to your fellows. We all like a storekeeper who is polite to us and we go to his store to do our shopping because he is pleasant to deal with. Everybody likes to be treated well and everybody resents rudeness and discourtesy.

Good manners sometimes win a fortune. The story is told of a young man who was usher at a church. One day he saw a crowd of boys making fun of two old ladies who were oddly dressed; just as the ladies were about to turn away from the church, the usher came out and invited them in, gave them the best seats at his disposal, and saw that they were comfortable. A few years later, these ladies died, leaving a large fortune to the young stranger who had shown them politeness. Such substantial reward rarely comes to any one as a result of a courteous act, but he receives other rewards of much more value, in the esteem of his associates, the love of his friends, and the loving kindness which politeness always brings into the hearts of its possessor.

Politeness does not mean a few conventional airs and graces; it must come from the heart and be the result of a generous, kindly feeling toward everybody, no matter what his social position may be. The beggar is entitled to your courtesy as much as the millionaire.

President Jefferson was once riding along with his grandson when they met a colored servant who took off his hat and bowed to them. Mr. Jefferson returned the salute, but his grandson did not notice the servant in any way; instead he rebuked his grandfather for treating so politely an inferior. Mr. Jefferson quietly said: "Would you let a colored servant be more polite than you?"

There are some people in this world who are really polite at heart but are too shy to practice even the smallest graces of manner, hence they are often judged unfairly. These people are to be pitied, but they must either overcome their bashfulness or suffer all their lives. Bashfulness means thinking too much of one's self and the only way to overcome it is to fix all one's thoughts upon others. Emerson said, "Life is short, but there is always time enough for courtesy."
